CANTEEN MANAGEMENT

School canteens, commonly referred to as cafeterias provides a range of food options from complete, nutritionally-balanced meals to a' la carte choices. Faced with an overwhelming array of choices, and with little nutrition knowledge to guide them, middle and high-school students often struggle making wise lunch choices. Some schools encourage school canteen whereas some schools Discourage the same because a canteen in school has its advantages and Disadvantages as well.

Advantage of a canteen is that the students do not need to leave the school for their lunches, which allows more time for eating and means that parents do not need to rush to pack a lunch in the morning.

Disadvantage of canteen is that too many food options can lead to poor food choices for students who may be overwhelmed with their new freedom to choose what they eat for lunch. Parents may be the ones putting money on their students' lunch cards, but they often know little about the foods their children select.

This SOP covers the parameters of a quality canteen procedure in the school.

CUSTOMER SERVICES MANAGEMENT

Strong (CSM) customer service management is so vital to the surviving -- and thriving -- of your school that it should not be done in a reactive and sporadic approach. Instead, it needs to be done proactively from a well-designed customer service management plan.

Quality CSM Inputs to the system, such as best practices in customer service, sales and marketing, funding, and human resources. It develops ongoing processes to sustain great customer service, such as clarifying customers' needs, meeting or exceeding those needs, getting feedback, managing complaints, and overall managing customer relationships

Quality CSM assures the outputs from the system, such as useful reports about customers' needs and activities, and more highly skilled employees in providing customer service. It outcomes, the greatest of all including increased customer satisfaction and loyalty
